ALIVE WITH CULTURE AND A SENSE OF PLACE

In 1845, Scotsman Robert Chichon Wyllie entered the service of King Kamehameha IV, Alexander Liholiho, as minister of foreign affairs. In 1850, the area of today's Princeville was purchased by Wyllie for the king. Wyllie planted sugar cane and coffee and constructed a large, modern mill which he imported from Scotland. As Wyllie grew his estate, Hawaii's king and his wife Queen Emma welcomed a son and heir into the world – Albert Kauileouli Leiopapa – born May 20, 1858. When he was just two Prince Albert first visited Wyllie's expansive estate on Kauai.

It was during one of these royal visits that Wyllie named his estate "Princeville," in honor of young Prince Albert who was beloved by Wyllie and all Hawaiians. It was Wyllie's intention to deed the estate to Prince Albert, proclaiming it to be the "Barony de Princeville," the "city of the prince."
